1975

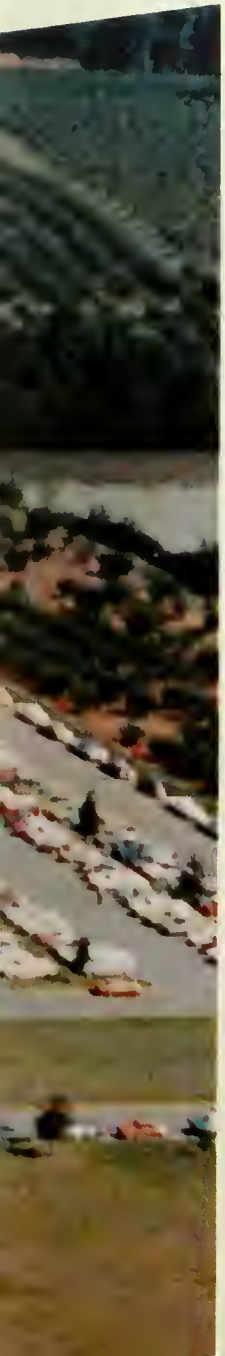
The University of South Carolina-Spartanburg. A fully accredited, four-year institution of higher learning. But it wasn't always this way . . .



USC-Spartanburg was begun in 1967 as a two-year regional campus aimed at filling the void left when the nursing instruction program of Spartanburg General Hospital was phased out. Its first home was the basement of the hospital's nursing quarters. Later it moved to the old County Health Building. That first year one hundred and seventy-seven undergraduates comprised the entire student body.

Less than a year later it was evident that the enrollment was outgrowing the facility. Through the efforts of the Spartanburg County Commission for Higher Education, land was aquired for construction of the $1.2 million Administration Building. Groundbreaking ceremonies were held in September of 1968.

In September, 1969 the building was completed and USC-S, with enrollment nearing five hundred, moved into its permanent home. The new facility provided many conveniences and a great deal of equipment which had been lacking at the hospital. A language lab, improved biology and chemistry labs and a spacious, modern library were all welcome additions to the institution. The move was important to everyone but was most special to those few who had been a part of USC-S since its inception . . .

John Edmunds is a Professor of History who serves as Chairman of the Division of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

"In the early days there was a very small nucleus of permanent faculty with several instructors shared with other regional campuses. Since there were so few of us we were very close. I developed some good friendships during this time which I still have.

The equipment then was less than adequate. We had to borrow some things such as maps from USC-Union. The microscopes we used belonged to the hospital. In the classroom the instructor's voice had to compete with the clanging of steam pipes.

Despite all of this we developed a sense of pride in the school which still remains.

The growth of USC-S has been incredibly fast. We are now a four-year institution which will continue growing. My hope is that we will become more autonomous but will not lose our ties with the University in Columbia."

Edmunds

Hall

Rivers Hall was Chief of Maintenance at Spartanburg General Hospital in 1967 when USC-S was begun. He joined USC-S in that same capacity in 1973.

"When the school started it consisted of a bunch of boxes. There was no equipment at all and I spent a great deal of time improvising.

We made blackboards from plywood and paint and put up partitions to provide office space. Something needed to be done quickly so we did the best we could.

The whole thing was a pioneer concept. It began with nothing and some people didn't think it would get off the ground. The growth has been outstanding to the point that we must begin to think of expansion in terms of more than one structure at a time.

"USC-S has always been cramped for space but these hardships seem to project a feeling of oneness. When the time came to move into the new buildings, some of the best workers were members of the administration and students.

The student body here is outstanding. They are remarkable people and I enjoy being associated with them."

Margaret Lesene is an Assistant Professor of Business Education and Office Administration.

"Early in 1967 when I heard that Spartanburg would have a USC regional campus I contacted officials in Columbia and thus became one of the first faculty members of our school.

That fall we opened on the ground floor of the Nurses Residence with fifteen full and part-time faculty members and one hundred and seventy-seven students.

While we were crowded for space the first years, there was a cozy feeling of oneness that permeated our school--both faculty and students. We all had one desire--to make USC-S a big success!

We have now grown into a four-year institution with more than thirteen hundred undergraduates and five hundred graduate students. Our faculty has expanded to seventy and the staff to seventeen.

I am pleased with our phenomenal growth. I think there is a definite need in this community for a moderately priced educational facility. It is wonderful that we have attracted so many good students to our campus."

Lesesne

Lithard

Paul Lithard is a foreign language instructor who teaches both German and French.

"In those first days there were only eight or nine faculty members but they were very involved with students and school affairs.

In addition to German and French, I also taught Spanish. In fact, I was the entire foreign language department. We had no language labs then but the students were well prepared. We made out the best we could under the circumstances.

The students then made the school what it is today. I feel that it will continue its growth with the years.

The young people simply need to look at the older students we have here to see that what they learn now will be useful in later life."

Murph

Marian Murph serves as the institution's Administrative Assistant.

"When I started to work in April of 1967 there was no USC regional campus. All I had was a telephone. My table and chair were borrowed from the hospital.

Dr. Stirzaker, the school's first director, came in July. We did everything that was done, even putting the furniture together.

During this time a new hospital wing was under construction and we had to work while listening to jackhammers and bulldozers.

Those of us who have been with USC-S since the beginning have a special feeling about the school. A certain spirit of cooperation which arose from those hardships has made each accomplishment a great reward.

"The greatest reward is to see former students return to the community and become leaders, some who may have been denied the chance to further their educations without USC-S."

James P. Sloan, Assistant Professor of Political Science, served as USC-Spartanburg Assistant Director for Academic Affairs from 1970 through 1973 when he chose to return to full-time teaching.

"In the beginning, there were only seven or eight faculty members. We were able to hold meetings with the entire group sitting around one table. We were on a first-name basis, a closely-knit group, and there was a great feeling of cooperation.

Sloan, who became a university professor after a long career in industry and public relations, considers teaching "an opportunity to make a contribution to the lives of young people while they are in their impressionable years.

In commenting on the phenomenal growth of USC-S, he considers it good "because it provides many students who otherwise would be denied a college education an opportunity to receive one at a reasonable cost."

Sloan

Stirzaker

Norbert Stirzaker, USC - Spartanburg's first director, served in that capacity until 1973. He is now an Associate Professor of Educational Administration.

"When we first started there were only nine faculty members so we were closely knit. We met practically every day at coffee break. This is what is missed most as the school grows. There were close relationships with both the faculty and students. Problems could be solved quickly because good lines of communication existed within the group.

I used to enjoy taking cheerleaders and players to basketball games in my station wagon since the school had no cars of its own."

With growth things are less personal. But growth is inevitable in a metropolitan area the size of Spartanburg. We're in the largest single tax-paying district and deserve a first class, four-year institution. USC-S can not help but continue to grow.

David Taylor is an Assistant Professor of Biology. He is also the Chairman of the Division of Science, Engineering and Mathematics.

"When we began in the basement of the nurses residence at the hospital, the faculty was so small we could sit around one table.

The laboratory and classroom facilities were not ideal but were adequate for the time.

Today we have grown tremendously. I would like to see expansion in the science area but we must expand first in the areas of heaviest enrollment. We must support the requirements of the majority of our students. This is why the school exists.

The growth of USC-S is evidence of the need for this type of institution in the community. We have been able to provide a reasonable priced education for many who may not have had the opportunity to recieve it otherwise."

Taylor

The G.B. Hodge Center was the second addition to the USC-S campus. Occupied in January of 1972, it provided a modern gymnasium, a more spacious student center, and lab facilities for nursing instruction. Fall '73 registration saw enrollment reach the seven hundred Full Time Equivalent level and the regional campus received the authority to offer junior-level courses for the first time.

The $1.5 million Hodge Center provided a great boost to the USC-S athletic program. Beginning in 1972 the basketball team, sporting the new name "Rifles," was able to play its home games in a gymnasium it could be proud of. The seating capacity of more than twenty-one hundred and an excellent lighting system were quite an improvement over the small, poorly lit Evans Junior High School gym which had formerly been the Rifles' home.

In the fall of 1974 an outstanding recruiting program culminated in the enrollment of nearly fourteen hundred undergraduates and over five hundred graduate students. More importantly, the one thousand Full Time Equivalent requirement was met and the University received official four-year status. The vast influx of students required more space than was available on the campus and arrangements were made to hold classes at the nearby Rodeway Inn.

FALL REGISTRATION

On the second day of fall registration the magic number of 1000 was reached. This number of Full Time Equivalent students allowed USC-S to begin offering senior level courses.

Except for this, registration was dull as usual. Lines were long, everyone wanted your money and signs were posted everywhere telling you to "do this" and "don't do that."

Obviously, some students just couldn't cope with the situation.

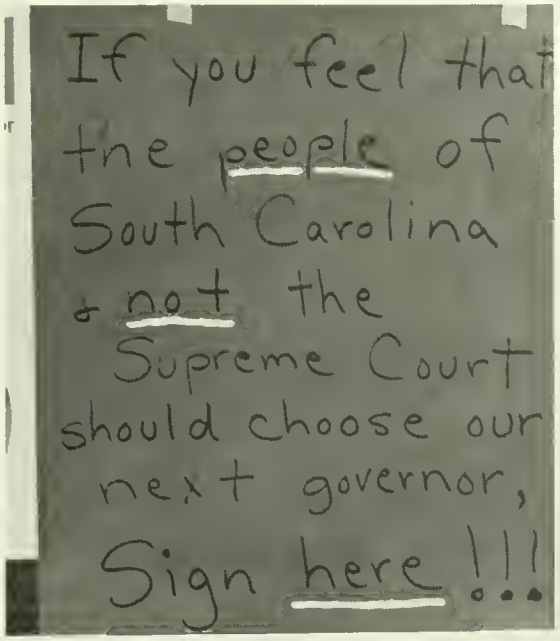
1975 MISS USC-S LINDA BURGESS

Watergate, Ravenel's disqualification, the resignation of a president, and the election of a Republican governor for the first time since Reconstruction were a few of the happenings in the political world during the school year.

Perhaps the most intriguing event was the state gubernatorial race. Charles "Pug" Ravenel defeated Congressman Bryan Dorn in a run-off to win the Democratic Primary after a circuit judge ruled him eligible to run.

In the state's first Republican Primary State Senator Jim Edwards defeated retired Army Chief of Staff, General William Westmoreland.



Initial indications pointed to a Ravenel win---but things began to change. A suit was brought against Ravenel charging that he did not meet the residency requirements stipulated in the State Constitution. The State Supreme Court ruled that Ravenel was ineligible. Another suit was taken to the U.S Supreme Court charging that the rights of the 187,000 persons who had voted for Ravenel in the primary had been violated. The court ruled that this was not the case, thus Ravenel and his many supporters abandoned their hopes. This was a bitter disappointment to many young people to whom Ravenel represented change and this, to them, was a tremendous letdown.

After Ravenel's disqualification, The Democratic Party nominated Bryan Dorn who had initially been beaten by Ravenel in the run-off primary.

Dorn and Edwards began campaigning in what was to become one of the closest races in the state's history. Both candidates made appearances on campus and talked with students and faculty alike.

Republican candidate Edwards visited USC-S on September 4 and conducted a question and answer session with students in the student center. Edwards, in answering several questions posed by students, stated that he was behind President Ford in regards to the president's amnesty program. The state senator further stated that he was in favor of capital punishment and against the legalization of marijuana.

Bryan Dorn, the Democratic Party's candidate, visited campus on October 24. Congressman Dorn spoke to James Sloan's Political Science 201 class noting that "One of the top priorities in South Carolina today is education." Dorn also spoke with several students in other classes as he toured the campus. Dorn stated that he would support the adoption of the Equal Rights Amendment and would continue to fight for increased educational benefits for veterans.

Other candidates made appearances campaigning for other positions in the state government. On September 19 Republican candidate for Attorney General Ken Powell spoke on campus. Powell called for change---a word that was heard more and more throughout the year's election.

On October 10 Democratic candidate Brantley Harvey visited the student center and answered various questions posed from students.

During the campaigning USC-S student's preferences were obvious. The cars in our overflowing parking lots were a mass of bumper-stickered vehicles---each proclaiming their owner's choice.

Interested students began organizing clubs to aid their candidate's campaign. Throughout the campaigns USC-S students joined various band-wagons. Then the election came and resulted in the first Republican governor in one-hundred years and then things quieted down.

FALL PARTY IS GIANT SUCCESS

The fall party held in the student center was a huge success as an overflow crowd boogied to the sounds of "Mainstream" from Durham, North Carolina.

An emergency trip for more beer combined with the excellent band made this one of the year's most successful social events.

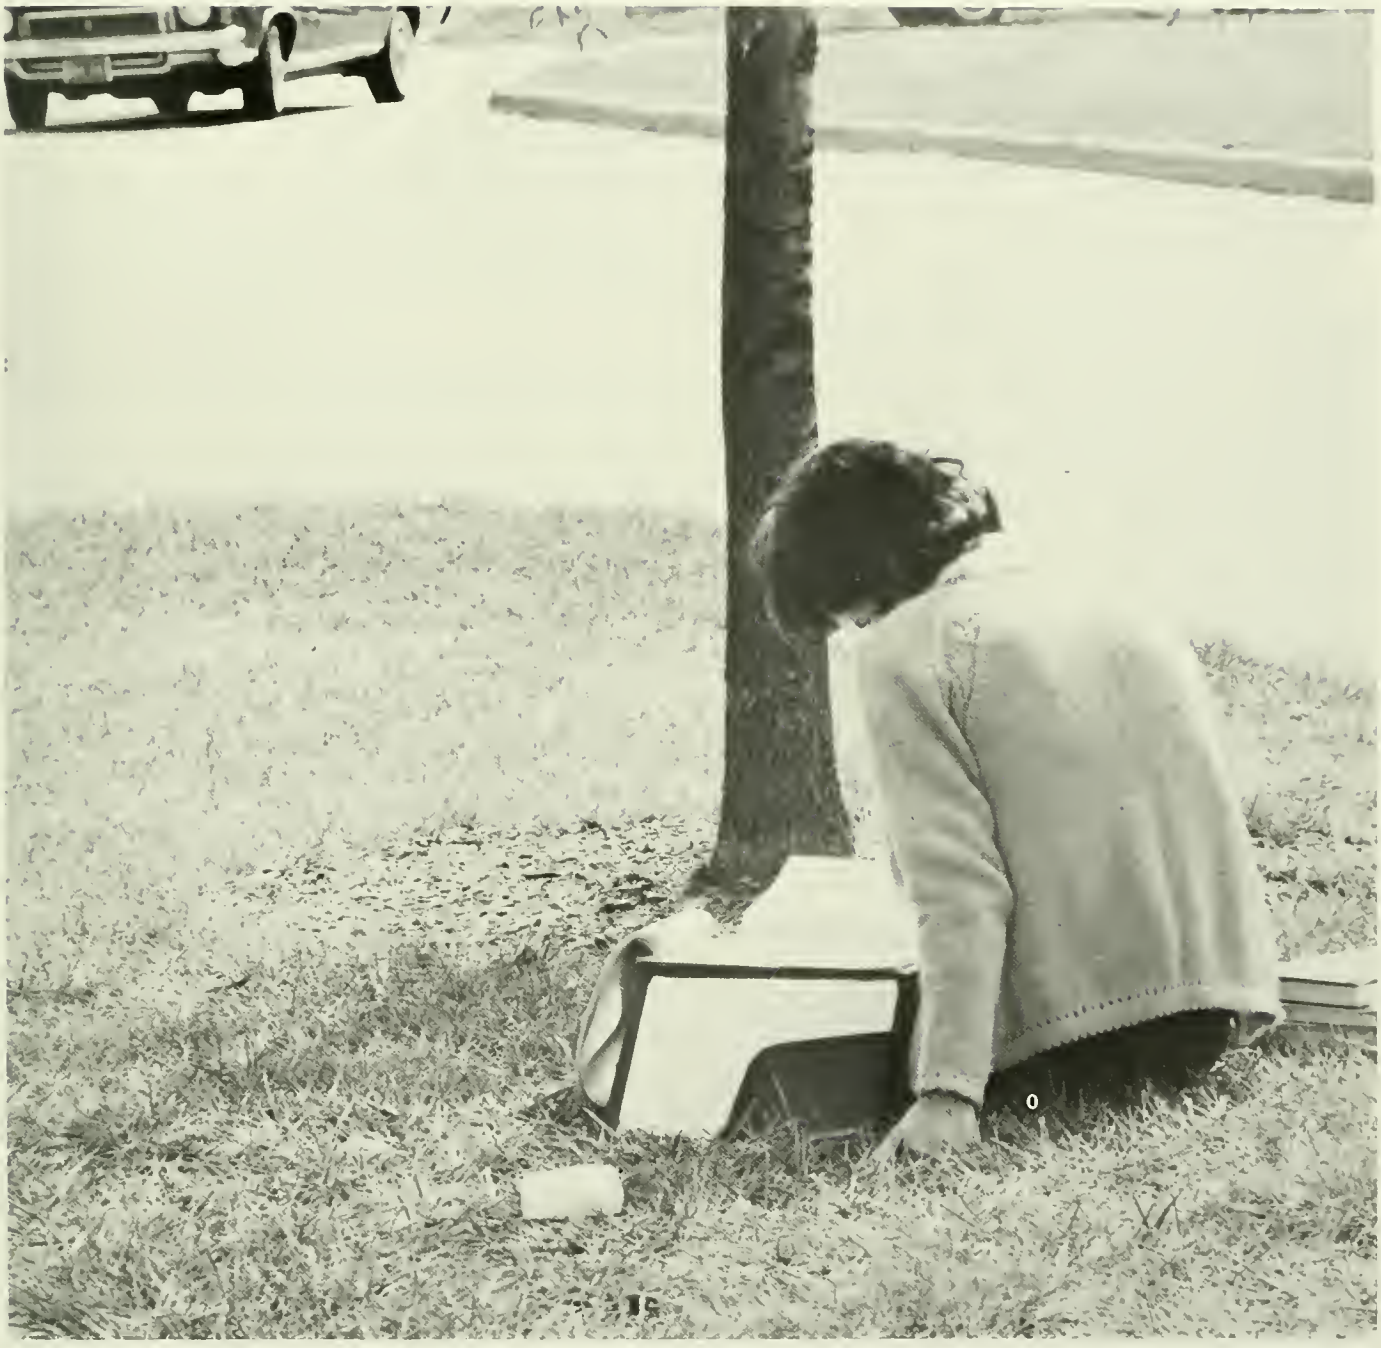
CHRISTMAS PARTY



A STARTLING EXPOSE

Some of our nurses live at the Nurses Residence. The General Hospital facility is the only dormitory housing available to USC-S students.

Life at the residence is just like any other dorm. There are parties and card games, teddy bears and illegal pets, laundry to do and long lines at the telephone. Some students even find time to study.

SGA OFFICERS

The 1974-75 Student Government Association has been active this year. Many parties have been held. The freshman class sponsored a Thanksgiving dinner for the children at the Salvation Army, and The Film Committee had several movies brought to the campus. A concert was held in Spartanburg Auditorum, and Founders Day was held in the gym.

One of the ways SGA is open to students is that all meetings are open to any student; however, few students took advantage to come to express their views.

VSL OFFICERS

The Veteran's Student League was established in 1973 to promote fellowship among veterans and their families and to create a liaison between returning veterans and non-veteran students. It further serves to enrich and fulfill a veteran's college career and to represent USC-S in community affairs through its many projects.

The organization realized a long-term objective this year when it was able to raise sufficient funds to establish the Veteran's Short-Term Loan Fund. This year also saw the first meeting of the Outside Veterans Advisory Committee, which consists of advisors from the business and industrial world who are interested in the affairs of the USC-S vet.

Led by Secretary Wayne Beard, Treasurer Len Carroll, President Jack Threadgill and Vice President Bill Lanford (not shown), the VSL participated in many worthwhile community projects such as a Children's Circus, the March of Dimes, Goodfellows and the American Cancer Society's "Send a Mouse to College" drive.

Through these efforts the VSL has maintained its reputation as one of the most service oriented organizations on campus.

The staff has had a lot of fun meeting deadlines, missing deadlines, and spending sleepless nights at school. There are so many things that could and should be said, but it can all be summed up in one word--thanks--to the dedicated people who saw it through. This year has seen many firsts at USC-S. We have reached one thousand full-time students had classes at a motel, and entered into four-year intercollegiate competition.

Keeping pace, the CAROLANA has more pages than ever before, a color introduction, and a more in-depth look into student life at USC-S.

Going through the pages of this book we encountered many problems, difficulties in film processing, and lack of cooperation among students. Special thanks go to Lester Richards, Heather Taylor, Laurie Hill, Susan Harrison, Alden Hall, Mike Charles, Susan Henson, Alfred Sergiacomi, Susan Wood, Becky Patterson, Charlie Winston, and Steve Boiter.

We hope students enjoy going through this book. This is more than an annual, it is memories--memories of haircuts fashions, cars, and school life. Apologies go to those who were not remembered because of deadline pressures.

Narrowly meeting dead-lines, cursing the typewriter, rushing still dripping prints to the printer and cutting classes in order to get the newspaper out in time. All of these are just a few of the memories the Carolinian Staff will have the '74-75 school year.

There were weeks when copy was scarce and it was a miracle if enough could be set for a four-page paper. Then there were those weeks when an eight-page paper wasn't big enough for all the copy. But through it all a small but dedicated staff kept publishing the Carolinian each week.

This year saw several changes in the newspaper including the addition of a new column, the Rifleman, and several nameplate changes.

"How can we nail the flats without a hammer?"
"Room 209 is too small for a play to be held!"
"We must be the only Drama Club in the world who builds sets outside."
"We'll have to tear the set down again. Nothing will go through the doors."

These were just a few of the statements one could hear if they walked into one of the Drama Club meetings. This was the first Drama Club chartered at USC-S in two years. Unfortunatley, the Drama Club had a rough year. The club started out with no flats and a limited supply of make-up. Early in the year the club decided to do a production of "Barefoot in the Park." However the rehearsal schedules were impossible to fit around the players' classes coupled with problems in trying to reserve 209 for set construction led to the cancelling of the production.

The same problem was encountered in taking the club picture.

On paper, the Spartan Rifles experienced a rather disappointing season, but we must realize that we entered four-year competition and nobody could expect miracles.

This year the "new look" Rifles welcomed Bill Reitmeier as their new skipper. Coach Reiteier knew he had a task to fulfill, and took it all in stride and gave us some exciting basketball.

The team faced one of the toughest schedules possible for a school in its freshman year of big-time basketball. They met two nationally-ranked teams in addition to other tough teams firmly established in four-year basketball.

The Rifles proved they could keep up with the big boys, as they stayed in the game with most of them, including giving second-ranked Gardner-Webb a fight for their lives before the Bulldogs finally won out.

Before the season began, Coach Reitmeier said "we have to learn to crawl before we can walk." We may have had a losing record this year, but with a coach like Bill Reitmeier, the basketball program at USC-S has a very optomistic future.
